Hello,

I understand completely that the end product will be tested at a state licensed lab for potency, etc. We have to have an in-house testing capability to dial in the legal potency for each batch of products. Having the tcheck device takes the guesswork out of it.

Kind regards,

Good morning,

In regards to in-house testing, that is allowed under 3 AAC 306.505(a)(9) as it is for your own use and information. Any results from that test would not be able to be placed on your label and you would still need to have the concentrate or product tested with a licensed testing facility.

Be prepared to answer questions from the board regarding your in-house testing methods.

Good morning,

The notarized, signed testing form I just submitted (page 7 of MJ - 05, the notarized page) has a question at the top regarding in-house testing. There is a new device out that assists in determining proper levels of MJ for accurately establishing potency. It is called the T-Check. You can find out more at www.tcheck.me

Would you consider letting me reply with this information to any questions the board may have about in-house testing, or should I supply more specific information to the form.

Finally, I have circled the "yes" answer on where at the facility in-house testing will take place. Our Bakery building is one room, will I need to be more specific on where the testing will take place? I apologize for not marking the Bakery building as a testing location, but the T-Check is about the size of a deck of cards, and provides accurate readings in about one minute. Testing could be done by the sink, or by the prep table, e.g., or any location inside the building. The Bakery building is the sole structure on the application and it seems redundant to indicate it; I can submit an update if you prefer it indicated.

I just want to be sure you understand the nature of our testing, and I truly hope it is acceptable to AMCO, as the AMCO office probably has a different method for "in-house testing" in mind.
