Alaska parental notification abortion law struck down

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) – The Alaska Supreme Court on Friday struck down a state law requiring parental notification for girls under age 18 seeking abortions, agreeing with pro-abortion rights advocates that the mandate approved by voters in 2010 was unconstitutional.

Justice Daniel Winfree, writing for the majority, said the court was not deciding whether abortions should be available to minors without restrictions but that the abortion notification law violated Alaska's constitutional equal protection provisions giving the same rights to all Alaskans.

In a concurring opinion, Justice Dana Fabe disagreed that the law violated the girls' equal protection rights but said she believes it violated their right to privacy.

"I believe that the Alaska Constitution permits a parental notification law, but not one that contains provisions that are among the most restrictive of any state's notification laws," she wrote.

The decision was praised by pro-abortion rights advocates, including the American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska and Planned Parenthood of the Great Northwest and the Hawaiian Islands, which challenged the law.

"A young woman seeking an abortion doesn't need additional hurdles. She needs a doctor," said Joshua Decker, executive director of Alaska's ACLU, in a statement.

Supporters of the law criticized the ruling, noting that it won majority support among voters. The voter-led initiative was supported by 56 percent of voters.

The court's decision "elevated the demands of abortionists over the rights of parents," said Steven H. Aden, a lawyer for the Alliance Defending Freedom anti-abortion group that argued for maintaining the law.

Justice Craig Stowers cast the only vote against striking down the law, writing that it provided parents an opportunity to discuss with daughters the impact of abortions and alternatives to ending pregnancies.

"The Alaska Court today trivializes and makes this right of no effect," he wrote.

Under the law, doctors who performed abortions for those under age 18 in violation of the notification requirements could be sued later by the girl or her parents for damages.

A lower court had already struck down that provision but state attorneys defending the law sought to have it reinstated, Fabe wrote.

She described that element of the law as "more punitive and chilling" than penalties for doctors in other U.S. states where parental abortion notification is required.

Alaska's notification law did not apply to girls ages 16 or 17 who were married, supported themselves independently or had court orders specifying they had been emancipated from parents or guardians. Girls who did not want to notify parents about an abortion had the option of getting permission from judges.

Girls who said they were abused by one or both parents could bypass the notification process by providing a notarized statement signed by the victim and another person who knew about the alleged abuse. The law included an exception for medical emergencies.

Alaska's law was more restrictive than the parental notification laws in 11 other U.S. states because of the rigorous notification documentation required, said Laura Einstein, chief legal counsel for Planned Parenthood of the Great Northwest and the Hawaiian Islands. There also were stiff judicial standards for allowing girls to get abortions without parental notification, she said.

Republican state Sen. Mia Costello, one of the initiative's original sponsors, expressed disappointment with the decision, saying the court was "making judgments that are denigrating of families and parents."

"It's the wrong direction that our country is going in, really, where families are being kept in the dark about things," she said.

Costello said it is premature to say whether state legislators will propose a new parental notification law and that she thinks lawmakers must focus on addressing a multibillion-dollar state deficit brought on largely by low oil prices.

Cori Mills, a spokeswoman for the state's Department of Law, said the 90-page court decision was being reviewed by state attorneys but that the notification requirement is no longer enforceable because of the ruling.

Bill Overdorff

July 30, 1932 – July 22, 2016

Bill Overdorff died suddenly on July 22, 2016 in Brownsville, OR, one week short of his 84th birthday. William Roy Overdorff, Jr. was born to Jessie (Olson) and William Roy Overdorff, Sr. in Washington D.C. on July 30, 1932; he was an only child. They moved while he was quite young to Grand Island, Nebraska, which was where he grew up. After he graduated from high school, he attended the University of Montana in Missoula, earning a Forestry Degree.

He moved up to Juneau, Alaska to work for the U.S. Forest Service, and there he met Delores (Dodie) Bennett. They married in 1957 and moved to Petersburg, Alaska, where a year later, their first child, KrieAnn, was born, and then he was transferred back to Juneau where Eric, and then Jodie completed their family. They all enjoyed the Alaskan lifestyle of boating and camping and fishing, and Bill also enjoyed hunting trips every fall. After a brief transfer to Anchorage in 1965, they returned to Juneau for several years, and then back to Petersburg, where he finished out his 30 year career with the Forest Service, retiring at the age of 52.

He and Dodie had divorced in 1977, and the next year he met and married Helen Wills Montgomery. They lived in Juneau for some time until she became ill, and they moved to Silverton, Oregon. They were married for 17 years until her death in 1995.

Bill remained in Oregon, and some years later, while living in Sweet Home, he met Elaine Darling; they were married on Valentine's Day in 2001, when he was 69. They moved to Pacific City and lived there for several years until they relocated to Lincoln City in 2011. Bill did some travelling in the early years after he retired, but as he grew older, he enjoyed staying home with a good book and a cozy fire. He always denied being a good cook, but he did like to putter in the kitchen, and we all looked forward to his corned beef dinner. He was a man with a dry sense of humor and a gruff exterior which hid his soft heart. He loved well and was well loved, and he will be dearly missed.

Bill is survived by his wife Elaine Darling-Overdorff, his ex-wife Dodie Overdorff, and his children: KrieAnn Kudar (Lincoln City), Eric and Kelly Overdorff (Petersburg, Alaska), and Jodie and Peter Brandt (Joseph, Oregon). He had 6 grandchildren – Adam Kudar, Collins Kudar, Ashley (and Randy) Bocchi, Rachel Kvernvik, Erica (and Scott) O'Neil, and Taylor Overdorff, and 4 great-grandchildren – Aspynn and Trinton Bocchi and Gavin and Olivia O'Neil. No service will be held, according to his wishes, and his ashes will be laid to rest in the Petersburg Memorial Cemetery in Alaska.

Manager's Report

The city manager presented the following report to the Assembly at Monday's meeting.

The 30 percent design documents for the Emergency Stand-by Generator (350 kw) replacement have been received from the vendor.

At Crystal Lake, we intend to replace the old "bubbler" lake level indicator system with a new electronic transducer, and add a new air temperature sensor – weather permitting. When complete, we will no longer have to maintain the nitrogen gas system at the lake, and the readings will be much more reliable and accurate.

Spillman Records Management System implementation was completed on July 19. Employees continue to learn the system. This will allow us over time to provide much better data on Police and Emergency Service issues.

Governor Bill Walker signed the Omnibus Crime Reform Bill on July 11. Portions took effect on July 22. The bill decriminalized many behaviors and adjusted classification of others. We're awaiting further information and guidance from the Department of Law.

The Summer Reading Challenge is over, and a V.I.P. pool party was held this past Thursday for the kids who read 840 minutes or more this summer.

Auditors are here from August 1-5, for the borough's annual audit.

The Drive Down Bulkhead project is on schedule. Materials are arriving and work is ramping up to drive the sheet pile and fill.

South Harbor parking is very tight; we appreciate the public assistance in leaving vehicles at home in between trips.

Public Works staff completed all prep work needed prior to paving of local streets by SECON. Now we wait for the weather to cooperate. We will be following SECON's paving efforts up with cleanup of side streets, and shoulder protection of the fresh asphalt.

CBC Construction has mobilized to Petersburg and is most of the way through with upgrades to Pump Station 2. Once complete, they will move directly to Pump Station 1 for that upgrade work. Once both stations are ready, the contractor will initiate use of the new force main and decommission the old force main on the South Harbor beach.

SEASWA is working with Waste Management (WM) for development of scrap metal removal contracts for the Authority's member communities. A WM representative will be visiting Petersburg in the first week of August to review our operation and learn about the logistics for scrap removal from the landfill.

Ramirez and Wickersham to wed

Petersburg residents Lidia Ramirez and Bryce Wickersham will be wed August 13, 2016 at the 4 Bar-K Ranch in Lubbock, Texas with Jerry Collison officiating. Lidia will be given in marriage by her father, Juan Ramirez, and her son J.J. Casarez. The maid of honor will be Lidia's daughter Kristen Casarez.
