As far as the issues of Prop 1 go, Myrna's will never be a place that tries to police a bathroom. Like Evans emphasized "Seriously, if I have to go potty, just let me fucking go potty. I don't care if there is some big old bear in the bathroom in the stall next to me." Jones showed me the design of the new signs for the bathroom that are on order to let everyone know exactly where they stand on the issue.

The new leadership at Myrna's has been bringing on new talent in DJ's and Drag, and wants to roll out some new entertainment options and programs as well. It is a slow process, but since the first day of 2018 they have been working tirelessly to get it right for the customers they care about. They want to take the best of what they have had for years, and infuse it with new energy and ideas, from co-workers and customers alike. Evans asked that I point out how grateful they are to be standing on the shoulders of those who put in so much work previously like all around handyman and former host of the Friday Night Diva Variety Show, Daphne DoALL LaChores, and others. It is an important place for so many people, and like Jones told me "There is so much history. All I can do as the manager now, is try to make sure that we keep going. This is where I met my husband 15 years ago. This is where we came when we heard about Orlando, this is where we were the night Trump got elected, this is where we gather, this is our community. This is our safe space."

And for anyone that was wondering, you can still get a cup of coffee. There is a new coffee maker, but like all the changes that are happening it is sleek, streamlined and better serves its purpose.

had these protections in place for 2 years without a single reported incident or issue. I think most voters will choose to keep them in place.

RJ: Does your group have more activism coming up in the future?

EA: I won't say much, but I will say that we still have an 18'x18' banner — so it would be a shame not to share it with Anchorage over the next few weeks.

RJ: What types of things does the opposition say to you when you are met with hostility?

EA: Honestly, we haven't seen a lot of hostility, but we're not the ones who have been out there nearly every day, making phone calls and knocking on doors. I would guess that many of the folks who will be tempted to vote yes might do so because they've never met a transgender person or because they believe Jim Minnery's assertions that transgender people should use 'their own' restroom. This country has tried 'separate but equal' before, and it didn't work then. We stand with the Anchorage transgender community in calling out Jim Minnery's hateful attacks. We support equal rights and equal access for all people.

It's these types of actions and attitudes that prove once again that issues of equality are human rights issues. It will take activism of all types to combat bigotry and hatred at all levels. From small cardboard signs on lampposts to giant banners and lighted signs, Anchorage is alive with grassroots campaigning. I look forward to seeing what happens next.
