Thank you for sending me the proposed regulation update.

I have a limited license. Limited license holders should pay less for the obvious reason that we don't make as much revenue and the fine is a bigger percentage of our income making it unfair.

Below are 2 ways that, IMHO, would be much better for the industry.

The late fee could be on a sliding scale for each license category like the annual renewals; maybe the fee as a percentage of the license fee would work

Perhaps you could have a sliding scale over time so that initially the fee starts out at some smaller value then goes up each month it is late before topping out after several months.

This could work because you guys take several months to process the licenses anyway. By having the filings come in over 3 months you could buy yourselves some time to process them without the appearance of being overwhelmed each year.

That's my spiel. Mostly it's unfair to me as a limited license holder.
