5 Elders were interviewed between the ages of 67 and 79 years old. Of the elders not born in Shaktoolik, most moved to the village because their family was originally from there, they married someone from the village or they came for the plentiful subsistence lifestyle the area offered. Their memories of early Shaktoolik include a rich subsistence lifestyle with a wide variety of food from the land, ocean and river. The community was strong and unified, concerned about the welfare of others, sharing everything. Children were raised by the community and punishment by elders was used as a last resort. In the future, community elders hope for that the community continues the rich subsistence lifestyle that is available to them, that the children are well educated and have lots of opportunities and finally, residence have a safe place to go when there is a storm or other natural disaster.

5. CLASSROOM EXERCISE

The children of Shaktoolik were asked to envision the community's future through drawings exercise and providing narrative exploration of what the community would look like when they were elders. The drawings and narratives are provide in Attachment A.

Youth Narrative/Drawing Summary:

Many children's narratives list businesses or amenities they would like to see in the community. Comments and drawings included restaurants, new stores, a McDonalds, an ice cream shop, a little JC Penny's and a Walmart. They hoped for more recreational activities like playgrounds, water parks, sports fields, an arcade, bike rentals and a teen center. They envisioned a community with a fire department, trash service, better roads, a church, law enforcement presence, a bank, a daycare and a fitness center. In the future they represented more houses, skyscrapers, hotels, a movie theatre and an animal shelter. They hoped for a more unified community, with more community gatherings and no addictions. They discussed economic opportunities through training and job corps; a place where everyone could have a job. Many of them drew pictures of a new village, still connected by bridge to the ocean and river, but a safe distance from the flooding and erosion. The represented the existing berm in many of their drawings. One youth summed it up by writing on her picture "When I'm an elder, I want Shaktoolik to be SPECTACULAR!"

Meeting participants were asked to add any additional issues not already identified and the Project Team recorded these issues on large pieces of paper at the head of the meeting room. With all issues identified, the Project Team asked participants to individually rank their top three (3) by putting check marks by the three most important issues on the list.
